How GRE is structured?

There is no common question paper or even a set of question papers for GRE preparation. The GRE is an adaptive style test, which means that your performance on the first section determines the difficulty level of the second. There are three sections in a GRE test paper:

QUANTITATIVE REASONING SECTION

VERBAL SECTION

ANALYTICAL WRITING ASSESSMENT (AWA)

Quantitative Reasoning	Verbal Reasoning	Analytical Writing Assessment
Section I (20 Questions)	Section 1 (20 Questions)	Analyze an Issue Task
Section 2 (20 Questions)	Section 2 (20 Questions)	Analyze an Argument Task
Time: 35 minutes per section	Time: 30 minutes per section	Time: 30 minutes per task

QUANTITATIVE REASONING

This section comprises questions of high-school level in geometry, algebra, arithmetic, applied maths, data interpretation, and data analysis. In this part, students have to answer 20 questions within a duration of just 35 minutes.

VERBAL SECTION

This section includes topics like reading comprehension, antonyms, analogies, sentence completion and vocabulary. You get 30 minutes to answer 20 questions. The three types of questions that come in this section are Text Completion (TC), Sentence Equivalent (SE) and Reading Comprehension (RC).

AWA

This section intends to test your ability to form a convincing theory and how persuasively and coherently you defend it over the course of several paragraphs. You are required to frame 2 essays in an hour, with roughly 30 minutes to devote to each:

Issue-Based Essay

This question would test your convincing skills. Its topic will be based on a general everyday issue, and you would be required to express your view on the said topic.

Argument-Based Essay

This question would require you to pick a side (for/against) and then explain your choice through a written response.
